

A Ramanathan a/l Chelliah v Public Prosecutor

HIGH COURT (KUALA LUMPUR) — CRIMINAL APPEAL NO 42–45 OF 1996
ABDULL HAMID EMBONG J
24 FEBRUARY 2005

B

Criminal Procedure — Judgment — Delay in writing — Whether prejudicial to appellant — Whether proper to order re-trial of the case

C

Criminal Procedure — Trial — Demeanour of witnesses — Whether likelihood of prejudice or mistake due to failure of trial judge to make remarks on demeanour of witnesses

Evidence — Burden of proof — Standard of proof — Erroneous standard of proof applied at the end of the prosecution's case — Whether misdirection of law capable of cure

D

Judgment of guilty was entered on the appellant on 8 November 1996 and the learned sessions court judge sentenced him to a term of imprisonment of four years on two charges under s 354 of the Penal Code. Before this court, two grounds were canvassed to nullify this conviction, inter alia, the delay in the judgment and misdirection on the standard of proof at the end of the prosecution case. It was submitted by learned counsel for the appellant that:

E

(1) this delay was too long and inordinate and that the learned sessions court judge had not given any reasons for it; (2) that the learned sessions court judge had also failed to comply with the Chief Justice's directive to prepare the grounds of judgment within six weeks; (3) that this confusion on the part of the learned sessions court judge in finding of a prima facie case in her grounds of judgment amounted to a serious misdirection and judicial defiance, which vitiated the whole proceeding. The learned deputy public prosecutor on the other hand submitted that: (1) a delay per se in preparing the grounds of judgment could not prejudice the appellant; (2) that the learned sessions court judge had analysed the facts and considered the demeanour of the main witnesses; (3) that the proceedings could be saved under s 422 of the Criminal

G

Procedure Code, even if the learned sessions judge had used the incorrect test in determining the standard of proof.

Held, allowing the appeal and setting aside the conviction:

H

(1) Without the assistance of the remarks on witnesses' demeanour while giving evidence especially on their hesitation, doubts, variations of language, mood changes or composure, amongst other traits, there is every likelihood of prejudice or mistake arising when considering their credit after a protracted delay (see para 10); Tan Hun Wah v Public Prosecutor and another appeal [1994] 1 MLJ 382 followed.

I

(2) To now advert to the demeanour of witnesses after a long lapse of over five years, would certainly be prejudicial to the appellant here. An appellate court will be guided by the impression on the demeanour of witnesses observed by a trial judge in his grounds of judgment but any such remarks if made too long after the trial should be of little or no weight, and may be found as here, to be prejudicial to the appellant (see para 10); Dr Soo Fook Mun v Foo Fiona & Anor [2001] 2 MLJ 193 followed.

(3) Based on that erroneous standard of proof which the learned sessions court judge applied over five years after the trial in evaluating the prosecution witnesses, demeanour included, it cannot be now said that that misdirection of law was capable of cure under s 422 CPC. The error had occasioned a failure of justice which was incurably illegal (see para 13); Dato Seri Anwar bin Ibrahim v Public Prosecutor and another appeal [2004] 3 MLJ 405 and Public Prosecutor v Ishak bin Hj Shaari & other appeals [2003] 4 MLJ 585 followed.

(4) The long delay in delivery of the judgment coupled with the misdirection on the legal burden of proof by the learned sessions court judge would make it inappropriate to order a retrial of this case (see para 14); Hiew Min Yong v Public Prosecutor [2001] 5 MLJ 1 followed.

[Bahasa Malaysia summary]

Perayu telah disabitkan pada 8 November 1996 dan hakim mahkamah sesyen telah menjatuhkan hukuman penjara selama empat tahun di atas dua pertuduhan di bawah s 354 Kanun Keseksaan. Di hadapan mahkamah ini, dua alasan telah dikemukakan untuk membatalkan sabitan tersebut, iaitu bahawa kelewatan dalam penghakiman dan penyalah arahan dalam standard pembuktian di akhir kes pendakwaan. Peguamcara perayu telah berhujah bahawa: (1) kelewatan tersebut adalah terlalu lama dan melampau dan bahawa hakim mahkamah sesyen telah gagal memberikan apa-apa alasan berkenaan kelewatan tersebut; (2) bahawa hakim mahkamah sesyen juga telah gagal untuk mematuhi arahan Hakim Besar untuk menyediakan alasan-alasan penghakiman dalam masa enam minggu; (3) kekeliruan oleh hakim mahkamah sesyen dengan keputusan kes prima facie di dalam alasan penghakimannya adalah suatu penyalah arahan yang serius dan merupakan satu ketidakpatuhan kehakiman, yang turut membatalkan keseluruhan prosiding tersebut. Timbalan pendakwa raya pula telah berhujah bahawa: (1) kelewatan dengan sendirinya dalam menyediakan alasan-alasan penghakiman tidak mampu memprejudiskan perayu; (2) bahawa hakim mahkamah sesyen telah menganalisa fakta-fakta dan telah mempertimbangkan tingkah laku saksi-saksi utama; (3) bahawa prosiding tersebut boleh diselamatkan di bawah s 422 Kanun Acara Jenayah, walaupun hakim mahkamah sesyen telah menggunakan ujian yang salah dalam menentukan standard pembuktian.

A Diputuskan, membenarkan rayuan dan mengetepikan sabitan:

- (1) Tanpa bantuan pemerhatian ke atas tingkah laku saksi-saksi semasa memberikan keterangan terutamanya pada keraguan, variasi bahasa, perubahan mood dan komposi, di antara ciri-ciri yang lain, terdapat kemungkinan berlakunya prejudis atau kesilapan dalam mempertimbangkan kredit mereka selepas suatu kelewatan yang amat lama (lihat perenggan 10); Tan Hun Wah v Public Prosecutor and another appeal [1994] 1 MLJ 382 diikuti.
- B
- (2) Kini untuk mengambil kira tingkah laku saksi-saksi selepas lebih lima tahun akan semestinya memprejudiskan perayu di sini. Sesuatu mahkamah rayuan akan diberi panduan oleh pemerhatian tingkah laku saksi-saksi oleh hakim perbicaraan di dalam alasan-alasan penghakimannya, tetapi untuk apa-apa pemerhatian yang dibuat setelah sekian lama selepas perbicaraan tersebut, pertimbangan yang diberikan mestilah kurang atau tidak langsung diberikan, dan seperti yang didapati di sini, ianya memprejudiskan perayu (lihat perenggan 10); Dr Soo Fook Mun v Foo Fiona & Anor [2001] 2 MLJ 193 diikuti.
- (3) Berdasarkan standard pembuktian yang telah salah digunakan oleh hakim mahkamah sesyen dalam penilaian saksi-saksi pendakwa, termasuk tingkah laku mereka, selepas lebih lima tahun daripada perbicaraan kes ini, ianya tidak boleh diperkatakan bahawa penyalah arahan undang-undang mampu diperbetulkan di bawah s 422 KAJ. Kesilapan tersebut telah mengakibatkan suatu kegagalan keadilan yang adalah 'incurably illegal' (lihat perenggan 13); Dato Seri Anwar bin Ibrahim v Public Prosecutor and another appeal [2004] 3 MLJ 405 dan Public Prosecutor v Ishak bin Hj Shaari & other appeals [2003] 4 MLJ 585 diikuti.
- F
- (4) Dengan kelewatan yang lama dalam penyampaian penghakiman dan penyalah arahan dalam beban pembuktian menurut undang-undang oleh hakim mahkamah sesyen, suatu perintah untuk perbicaraan semula kes ini adalah tidak sesuai (lihat perenggan 14); Hiew Min Yong v Public Prosecutor [2001] 5 MLJ 1 diikuti.

I
[2] Before this court, two grounds were canvassed to nullify this conviction, namely:

A I DELAY IN THE JUDGMENT:

B [3] The grounds of judgment written by the learned sessions judge was made available to the appellant on 26 October 2001, almost five years from the date the judgment was pronounced. It was submitted by learned counsel for the appellant that this delay was too long and inordinate and that the learned sessions court judge had not given any reasons for it. She had also failed to comply with the Chief Justice's directive to prepare the grounds of judgment within six weeks. This latter ground must not however be taken as a hard and fast rule but an administrative guideline. I am aware that magistrates and sessions courts judges are subject to transfer at sometimes short notices and in the process there could arise a lot of administrative disruptions in their duties, one of which is to prepare their grounds of judgments left behind when they take up new postings.

D [4] The inordinate delay causing prejudice to the appellant is however a justiciable cause for this court's consideration. This ground is also guided by legal principles decided by the apex court of the country.

E [5] The guiding principle regarding delay by the court to supply the grounds of judgment is now settled and the Supreme Court in Tan Hun Wah v PP and another appeal [1994] 1 MLJ 382 had clearly stated that principle. In that case the trial was spread over a period of some 9 months and 6 days and there was a delay of 3 years and 3 months in supplying the grounds of judgment. It was held by the Supreme Court:

F The general principle that 'justice delayed is justice denied' does not mean that every form of delay should result in vitiating the whole proceedings. However, the principle of fair trial should be applied even more rigorously where the excessive delay is caused not by the prosecution but by the trial court itself. If the facts of a case warrant it, where there is a long delay in the supply of grounds of judgment, an appellate court would readily accept the allegation of prejudice on the basis that there was every likelihood not only that the trial judge's impression on demeanour of witnesses would be blurred, but also the delay would increase the chances of omission on the part of the trial judge to deal with material facts and issues in the grounds of judgment, which ought to have been favourable to the appellants.

H [6] Learned counsel also adverted this court to the case of Dr Soo Fook Mun v Foo Fiona & Anor [2001] 2 MLJ 193 to state the principle that a long delay has the effect of diminishing the weight an appeal court normally leads to the views upon the credibility of witnesses made by a trial court.

I [7] It cannot be overly emphasised that one of the main functions of a trial court is the evaluation of evidence unfolded before it and this can only be achieved through its evaluation on the credibility of witnesses which the trial court had the advantage of assessing in the audio-visual proceeding before it. This evaluation of their oral evidence also forms a substantial basis in coming to a decision. As such a long delay in writing his judgment could indeed blur a judge's decision especially in coming to a conclusion based on the credibility of witnesses, which includes their performance in the witness box, their demeanour et al, which form the foundation of making a properly evaluated finding.

[8] In this case, 18 witnesses testified, 12 for the prosecution and 6 for the defence. The decision of the learned sessions court judge, as can be seen from her lengthy grounds were, in the main based on the evaluation of those witnesses' testimonies which included the appraisal of their demeanour. For instance at para 70 of her judgment she concluded that SP2 'pada keseluruhannya seorang saksi yang lurus, berterus terang dan pemalu'. Similarly, the learned sessions judge accepted SP1's evidence by concluding at paragraph 44 of her judgment 'Saya menerima pada amnya keterangan SP1 sebagai keterangan yang boleh dipercayai walaupun ada banyak kali beliau hanya dapat menjawab secara umum/agak-agak sahaja'. The learned sessions judge also rejected the evidence of the defence witnesses notably that of SB2, SB3 and SB6, also based on their credibility. For example at paragraph 130.2 of her judgment she opined that SB6 is a defence witness with an interest and found him to be an inconsistent witness.

[9] The learned deputy public prosecutor had submitted that a delay per se in preparing the grounds of judgment could not prejudice the appellant. It was submitted that the learned sessions judge had analysed the facts and considered the demeanour of the main witnesses. In support the learned deputy cited Jai bin Adam @ Zainuddin bin Adam v Public Prosecutor [1995] MLJU 550, where it was held that unfairness and prejudice should be sufficiently established. However in that case, the facts and circumstances of the case brought the learned judge to the conclusion that the principle of Tan Hun Wah did not apply since that case primarily involved documentary evidence and as such oral evidence and the demeanour of witnesses did not play a vital role. Not so in the instant case before me. Even the learned deputy had observed that the learned sessions judge here had considered the demeanour of witnesses in her grounds of judgment. It may be noted that there was nothing mentioned in the notes of evidence on the learned sessions judge's observation on the demeanour of the witnesses. This she could do as permissible under s 271 of the Criminal Procedure Code which states:

A presiding magistrate recording the evidence of a witness may, at the conclusion of such evidence and at the foot of the notes thereof, record such remarks (if any) as he thinks material respecting the demeanour of such witness whilst under examination.

[10] This provision allows for a presiding judge to make remarks on the demeanour of witnesses (see David Anthony v PP [1985] 1 MLJ 453). It is indeed a salutary practice particularly if a trial is expected to drag over a long period, as is the case here. Without the assistance of the remarks on witnesses' demeanour while giving evidence especially on their hesitation, doubts, variations of language,

- A mood changes or composure, amongst other traits, there is every likelihood of prejudice or mistake arising when considering their credit after a protracted delay. To now advert to the demeanour of witnesses after a long lapse of over five years, in my view, would certainly be prejudicial to the appellant here. An appellate court will be guided by the impression on the demeanour of witnesses
- B observed by a trial judge in his grounds of judgment but any such remarks if made too long after the trial should be of little or no weight, and may be found as here, to be prejudicial to the appellant.

II MISDIRECTION ON THE STANDARD OF PROOF AT THE END OF THE PROSECUTION CASE

- C
- [11] The learned sessions court judge had found a prima facie case against the appellant on 1 December 1995. She had then adopted the correct direction on the burden of proof on the prosecution at its stage of the trial under s 173(f) of the Criminal Procedure Code, which required a beyond a reasonable doubt standard after a maximum evaluation of the prosecution evidence. What learned counsel for the appellant questioned was the finding of a prima facie case by the learned sessions court judge in her grounds of judgment 5 years later, by adopting the test laid down in the case of Tan Boon Kean v PP [1995] 3 MLJ 514, which departed from the principle laid down earlier in Khoo Hi Chiang v PP and another appeal [1994] 1 MLJ 265. It was submitted that that case was overruled by Arulpragasam a/l Sandaraju v PP [1997] 1 MLJ 1 where a quorum of seven justices of the Federal Court had on 27 July 1996, disagreed with Tan Boon Kean and restored the maximum evaluation test of the prosecution case as laid down by the five member panel of the Supreme Court in Khoo Hi Chiang. So, when the learned sessions court judge wrote her grounds of judgment in 2001, she had applied the test laid down in Tan Boon Kean, on a principle which was no longer by then good law. Learned counsel for the appellant had submitted that this confusion on the part of the learned sessions court judge amounted to a serious misdirection and judicial defiance, which vitiated the whole proceeding. The learned deputy, while noting that, even if the learned sessions judge had used the incorrect test in determining the standard of proof, relied upon s 422 of the Criminal Procedure Code, submitting that the proceedings could be saved thereunder. The case of Public Prosecutor v Ishak Bin Hj Shaari and other appeals [2003] 4 MLJ 585 was referred to by both parties. In that case the Court of Appeal held that if there were sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, then there would not be a miscarriage or failure of justice, and any misdirection on the applicable standard of proof would be curable under s 422 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned deputy had urged this court to analyse the evidence and come to a conclusion that there had not been a failure of justice in the sessions court coming to its conclusion on the guilt of the appellant. Learned counsel for the appellant took the stand that since the correct test was a maximum evaluation of the testimonies of witnesses, which includes the evaluation of their demeanour, this court should be scrupulous in evaluating those witnesses merely on the cold print of the notes.

[12] In Dato Seri Anwar bin Ibrahim v Public Prosecutor and another appeal [2004] 3 MLJ 405, the Federal Court had opined that ‘an appellate court should not put a brake and not going any further the moment that it sees that the trial judge says that that is his finding of facts. It should go further and examine the evidence and circumstances under which that finding is made and see whether ... there are substantial and compelling reasons for disagreeing with the finding’. (Emphasis added.)

[13] It is in this context that this court sitting in its appellate jurisdiction had considered the error on the standard of proof used by the learned sessions court judge. In my view, based on that erroneous standard of proof which she applied over five years after the trial in evaluating the prosecution witnesses, demeanour included, it cannot be now said that that misdirection of law is capable of cure under s 422 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I therefore held that that error had occasioned a failure of justice which, borrowing the phrase of the Court of Appeal in Ishak Hj Shaari is ‘incurably illegal’.

[14] The long delay in delivery of the judgment coupled with the misdirection on the legal burden of proof by the learned sessions judge, would make it inappropriate to order a retrial of this case (See Hiew Min Yong v Public Prosecutor [2001] 5 MLJ 1.

[15] For these reasons, I had allowed the appeal, set aside the conviction and acquitted and discharged the appellant.

Appeal allowed.
